

LEGEND™ LEGACY PROTECTION

Comprehensive Long-Term Care Planning Guide

Long-term care planning is not simply about insurance. It is about maintaining independence, protecting the wealth you worked a lifetime to build, and ensuring your family is never forced into crisis decisions. Proper structure allows you to choose how and where care is received — rather than having those decisions made for you.

Types of Care a Proper Plan Can Address

- Home Health Care — Professional services delivered in the comfort of your residence, including assistance with daily living, therapy services, and care coordination.
- Adult Day Care — Structured programs providing supervision, therapy, meals, and social engagement while allowing individuals to remain at home.
- Assisted Living — Supportive residential environments that help with activities of daily living while preserving dignity and autonomy.
- Skilled Nursing Facilities — Higher-level medical and custodial care when ongoing supervision is required.
- Memory Care Services — Specialized environments designed for cognitive conditions such as Alzheimer's or dementia.
- Hospice Services — Compassion-centered care focused on comfort, quality of life, and family support.

Many people assume government programs will absorb these costs. In reality, most long-term custodial care is not covered, leaving families exposed to significant out-of-pocket expenses that can rapidly erode savings.

Key Design Components When Structuring Coverage

- Daily or Monthly Benefit Selection — Determines how much support is available for qualified care expenses.
- Elimination Period — The time you self-fund care before benefits begin, similar to a deductible structure.
- Benefit Duration — Defines how long the pool of funds is available to support care needs.
- Care Setting Flexibility — Allows benefits to be used across home care, community programs, or facility care.
- Guaranteed Renewability — Coverage remains in force as long as premiums are paid.

Optional Planning Enhancements

- Inflation Protection — Helps maintain purchasing power as healthcare costs rise over time.
- Non-Forfeiture Features — Preserves value even if the policy is discontinued later in life.
- Return-of-Premium Structures — Provides legacy value if benefits are never fully utilized.
- Partnership-Qualified Strategies — May help protect assets under certain state programs.

Every structure must be aligned to the client's health outlook, retirement timeline, asset base, and desire to protect family members from becoming caregivers by necessity rather than by choice.

Why Planning Early Matters

Waiting until care is needed removes options. Planning in advance preserves control, expands eligibility, and allows decisions to be made from a position of strength rather than urgency. Long-term care planning is ultimately an act of stewardship — protecting not just finances, but family stability and personal dignity.
